

Intelligent design

Yes, it is possible to work a steady job in a creative field. Just ask Harrington College of Design (200 W Madison St, 866-590-4423, www.interiordesign.edu), the majority of whose students put their newfound design savvy to prompt use.

"Two thirds of our enrollment are career changers wanting to work right after graduation," says vice president of academics Sue Kirkman, also a practicing interior designer. "We equip them for architecture and design jobs, or to start their own businesses."

The college's namesake interior-design program has existed for a rock-solid 75 years. New programs, in digital photography and communication design, offer a modern perspective of today's marketplace. "Our new programs meld with interior design to follow the cross-pollination we've noticed happening in the design industry," Kirkman says.

Do it for... LOVE It may not come with an inflated paycheck, but a creative career sounds pretty sweet.
