Recognizing the dedication and talent of architecture educators in Illinois

"In the context of architectural education, the late Charles Moore, FAIA, winner of both AIA/ACSA Topaz and AIA Gold Medals, spoke of modern design theory's need to "endow with... love (to produce something correct and beautiful)." If you talk to Constantine's students (not coincidentally, Constantine was a student of Moore's), they are inspired, enthused and enamored by the possibilities of design and the opportunity to infuse places with memory and meaning. They are not distracted by theory for theory's sake, they are articulate, passionate, and speak in plain terms about place and space with confidence and ambition."
